CHAPTER 17
Political Parties
What Is a Party?

A political party is a group of persons who seek to control government by winning elections and holding office.
What Is a Party? (continued)

• The two major parties in American politics are the Republican and Democratic parties.

• Parties can be principle-oriented, issue-oriented, or election-oriented. The American parties are election-oriented.
What Do Parties Do?

• Nominate Candidates — Recruit, choose, and present candidates for public office.

• Inform and Activate Supporters — Campaign, define issues, and criticize other candidates.

• Act as a Bonding Agent — Guarantee that their candidate is worthy of the office.
• Govern — Members of government act according to their partisanship, or firm allegiance to a party.

• Act as a Watchdog — Parties that are out of power keep a close eye on the actions of the party in power for a blunder to use against them in the next election.
Review

1. A political party can be
(a) principle-oriented.
(b) issue-oriented.
(c) election-oriented.
(d) all of the above.
2. Political parties fulfill all of the following functions EXCEPT

(a) acting as watchdog.
(b) informing and activating supporters.
(c) supplying all campaign funding.
(d) governing by partisanship.
Why a Two-Party System?

1. The Historical Basis

The nation started out with two-parties: the Federalists and the Anti-Federalists.
2. The Force of Tradition

America has a two-party system because it always has had one. Minor parties, lacking wide political support, have never made a successful showing, so people are reluctant to support them.
3. The Electoral System

Certain features of government, such as single-member districts, are designed to favor two major parties.
4. Ideological Consensus

Most Americans have a general agreement on fundamental matters. Conditions that would spark several strong rival parties do not exist in the United States.
Multiparty Systems

Advantages

• Provides broader representation of the people.

• More responsive to the will of the people.

• Give voters more choices at the polls.
Multiparty Systems (continued)

Disadvantages

• Cause parties to form coalitions, which can dissolve easily.

• Failure of coalitions can cause instability in government.
One-Party Systems

Types of One-Party Systems

One Party Systems where only one party is allowed.
Example: Dictatorships such as Stalinist Russia

Modified One-Party Systems where one party regularly wins most elections
Example: Republican North and Democratic South until the 1950s.

Minor parties play several important roles:

“ Spoiler Role ”

• Minor parties, especially single-issue parties, often take stands on and draw attention to controversial issues that the major parties would prefer to ignore.
Why Minor Parties Are Important (continued)

Minor parties play several important roles:

Innovator

- Often, minor parties will draw attention to important issues and propose innovative solutions to problems. If these proposals gain popular support, they are often integrated into the platforms of the two major parties.

The Decentralized Nature of the Parties

• The federal system distributes powers widely, in turn causing the parties to be decentralized.
The Decentralized Nature of the Parties (continued)

Both of the major parties are highly decentralized and fragmented. Why?

- The nominating process pits party members against one another because only one person can be chosen to be the party’s presidential candidate.
All four elements of both major parties work together loosely to achieve the party’s goals.
State and Local Party Machinery

In cities, districts are divided into wards.

Wards are divided into precincts.

States are divided into congressional districts.

In large cities, the smallest unit of party organization may be a single apartment building.
The Three Components of the Party

- The Party Organization: Those who run and control the party machinery.
- The Party in the Electorate: Those who always or almost always vote for party candidates.
- The Party in Government: Those who hold office in the government.
The Future of Major Parties

Weakened connections to political parties:

For voters:

• More people are unwilling to label themselves as “Democrats” or “Republicans”

• Split-ticket voting—voting for candidates of different parties for different offices at the same election

Weakened connections to political parties:

For candidates:

• Structural changes have increased conflict and disorganization within parties

• Changes in the technology of campaigning, especially the use of television and the Internet, have made candidates more independent of the party organization
Weakened connections to political parties:

For candidates:

• The growth of single-issue organizations provides candidates with another source of financial support.

(a) with the Fourteenth Amendment

(b) popular opinion demanded decentralization

(c) the Federalist nature of the government
